23. Scalping (Short Duration); trades closed under 320 seconds (this is an average indicative time. Trades exceeding the given time frame may or may not be scalp trades considering the other factors such as spike in trading volume, low trading Profit/loss, trading around releases only, trades remain open for less period of time etc.), or trades that are closed below average or current spreads. There exists no justifiable rationale for opening and closing trades with differences less than the average 5 or 15 minute move if you are trading with a 5 or 15 minute time frame. This filter will apply corresponding to the data used in comparing the size of your trade (in pips) and the market volatility data. Anything less than the average move (adjusted for the spread applicable in your account) is a scalp trade. Anything closed in less than 320 seconds is a scalp trade. Any collection and succession of trades that are just being opened and closed in a short period (especially in blocks of multiple lots) are most probably rebate churners.

CFD/Future/Derivatives/Forex Scalping (Small Price Movement): it is a trading style used by traders to buy or sell an instrument and then hold it for a short period of time in an attempt to make a profit. A scalper looks to make a large number of trades, taking advantage of the small price movements which are common throughout the day. While scalping attempts to capture small gains, such as 0 to 20 pips per trade, the profit on these trades can be magnified by increasing the position size;
 - Scalping involves buying and selling currencies, typically with a brief holding time and with multiple trades taken each day.
 - Scalpers keep risk small in an attempt to capture small price movements for a profit. The small price movements can become significant amounts of money with leverage and large position sizes.
 - Scalpers typically use promotional forex accounts, as using a normal account will put them at a disadvantage.
 - Leverage, spreads, fees, and slippage are all risks that the scalper needs to control, manage, and account for as much as possible.
 - Hedging - High Frequency Trading - Algorithmic Trading - All Forms Of Trading Arbitrage - Latency Arbitrage - News/Event Arbitrage - Swap/Rollover Arbitrage- Trading volume spikes around/during volatile/thin markets OR for completion of volume requirements of the promotion, with a distinct change from previous trading patterns witnessed in the account
